COMMENT OF THE DAY

Suez Talks

THE new British plan to , solve the long-standing Suez Canal dispute has gone a long way towards overcoming Egyptian objections to the original proposals. Yet Egypt has failed to show the same spirit of conciliation and goodwill. Not only has she not proposed any compromise plan of her own but she has raised what can only be regarded as trifling objections to two small points in the new plan. Britain has virtually removed from the dispute the vexed question of whether uniformed technicians should maintain the base by proposing that the technicians should be supplied by civilian firms. This was an important concession, not so much by the British Government, but | by the Army for undoubtedly the maintenance of military base is the work of specialists and one with which the various technical services of the Army are thoroughly conversant. The Army could be justifiably resentful at having to allow civilians to undertake its work yet this concession was made in the hope that the dispute could be brought one step nearer settlement. What remaining objections would take place. are there to the new plan? The first question is the time likely to be taken to morning before the session evacuate the 80,000 troops began and at that time there from the garrison. Geneva, July 19.

The French Premier M. Pierre Mendes-France today began the last 48-hour lap of his race for peace in Indo-China amid rising hopes of success.

The French Premier, who will resign next Thursday if he fails in his bid, was understood to be confident of victory given the sincerity of Communist intentions.

The greater optimism in conference circles flowed more from a general atmosphere of conciliation by both East and West rather than from any solid achievement in narrowing the gap between them during the week-end talks.

A France-Presse report from Geneva said tension eased and statesmen attending the conference were visibly relieved when the restricted session did not produce any of the disturbing results that they had feared Kill Him?

Kagoshima, Japan, July 18. For several generations residents of Kagoshima, Kyushu island, western Japan, wondered about the origin of a tombetone in a local cometery shaped like a sake (rich wine) bottle with a wine glass on top. Antiquarians have now solved the mystery. The tombstone was erected by a local feudal lord more than 300 years ago over the grave of one of his retainers named Kadema in admiration of Kadema's prowess.

The antiquarians said Kadema drank in quick succession 13 glasses of sake, each glass containing more than one-and-half pints of the potent wine. The antiquarians are still trying to discover whether this killed him.—China Mail Special.

Blondes From Wrong Countries

Long Beach, Calif. July 18.

As international beauties paraded through Long Beach today, Americans are readjusting their conception of foreign pulchritude.

Coming down the Ocean Boulevard lined with thousands of curious, the richly-decorated floral floats carried about three times as many brownettes as blondes, brunetttes or redheads. Brown eyes won over blue, 2-1, and left hazel, green, grey and black-eye beauties for behind.

Americans have been changing their impression on foreign beauties since Ivana Kislinger, Miss Argentina, turned out to be a blonde, as did Miss Israel, Miss Brazil, whom Americans could imagine as a brunotte only, turned out to be a blueblonde, Maria Rocha, while Miss Finland reversed the procedure, turning up as a brown-eyed brownette. M I still in the 20th contury?" I asked myself as our black - lacquered, 200-yearold, flower-banked gondola floated past the House of Gold (Ca d'Oro).

The gondolier, in traditional colourful costume, serenaded us with love songs, sung since the first gondola plied the Grand Canal.

I was enjoying an away-fromit-all week-end in Venice. And now, with a full moon hanging over a floodlit Grand Canal, it seemed as if the clock had been turned back to a more peaceful and romantic age.

The blonde contessa at my side whispered something to me as if she were purring, later learnt that every attractive girl in Venice calls herself a contessa; the less attractive ones principessa, or princess.

How did all this come my way? A gondola, love songs, a contessa.

Simple, it was laid on for me by a well-known travel agency. I slapped down a pound to see "Venice By Night,"

A gondola picked me up at my hotel. Then it joined a convoy. Under the Bridge of Sighs, the Rinko Bridge, down the floodlit Grand Canal.

I was sharing the gondola with four British tourists whose North Country accents mingled with the purring of my contessa.

A short time ago crisis faced Venice's gondollers. Their prices were undercut by the motorboats. Few tourists could afford

New York, July 18. The National Association of Manufacturers today called for a co-ordinated effort to raise by $1,000,half of them from Britain, and 000,000 the potential spending of American vacationers abroad.

The NAM said that although American expenditures for foreign travel reached a record level last year of $1,000,000.000, this figure in relation to the nátional income was considerably less than the pre-World War II

The NAM, in a resolution adopted by its board of directors, said the ratio indicates a foreign travel potential of $2,000,000,000.

"To realise this potential, there must be co-ordination of effort on the part of shipping and airlines, those who provide accommodations abroad and all governments, including the US, in eliminating burdensome fron-tier formalities, particularly during the off season months," the NAM said.—United Press.

Belgians' Impatience Adds To Brussels Big Traffic Problem

Brussels, July 18.

Brussels, like London, is faced with the problem of finding room for the thousands of vehicles which crowd its narrow, winding streets. Every year the situation becomes worse, as another 10,000 vehicles come on the streets.

Long lines of slow-moving traffic in the rush hours and streets overflowing with parked cars have awakened the municipal authorities to the need for providing more parking space and straightening out the many bottlenecks.

One of the first problems to be tackled by a co-ordination committee set up to study traffic problems in the city, is the parking auestion.

A suggestion put forward already is for the conversion of the buildings of the old Gare du Nord, in the downtown area, into a six-storey garage capable of taking up to 1,000 vehicles.

COVERED GARAGE

Another proposal is to convort a former greyhound racing stadium in the centre of the elty into a covered public

Both of these parks could be used to help relieve some of the congestion but so far they are paper plans.

Officials of the Transport Administration admit that great chance of solving the problem was lost recently when some of the city's centre was levelled to build a railway link between the north and south stations, as well as a new station and a modern seven-storey air

A number of underground garages could have been built without difficulty while the new rail link was being dug.

The large-scale demolition of old houses, and the widening of the tortuous streets which ran between them, have done away with many bottlenecks. But the overall parking space has not been greatly increased.

PLANS DRAFTED

Transport officials are determined not to miss a second such opportunity. One way of solving the traffic congestion is to separate public transport from private. To this end plans have been drafted for putting many tram lines underground on much of their circuit. The digging of the necessary tunnels would gress, in which researchers, doctors and specialists allow underground garages to be built at the same time. from 47 countries, including Russia, are participat-

Trade Mission

Could Not Resist Politics

From Our Own Correspondent

No Communist trade mission can be expected to confine itself solely to the subject of trade. Sooner or later it is bound to drag in politics. And so it was with the Chinese mission which came to Britain to discuss the possibility of expanding Anglo-Chinese trade.

They made a fine offer—up to £100 million worth of trade this year. But only on the condition that Britain ended the embargo on the export of warlike goods to China.

This seems to give the lie to the Chinese claim that they now better understand the British viewpoint. For it was made perfectly clear to them at every stage of negotiations leading up to the visit as well as during the actual talks that the subject of the embarge was not on the agenda.

In the view of British signatories there was room for such an expansion of trade "within banis. limits imposed by existing] conditions," but first direct relations had to be established with Chinese state authorities.

At subsequent talks Geneva, the Chinese accepted this view and also an invitation to visit Britain to discuss the matter further. The original sponsors were then joined by the National Union of Manufacturers and the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, and the Sino-British Trade Committee was formed to act as the negotiating body.
